

I wanted to share a genuinely long story about how our team spent the last quarter rebuilding our onboarding flow from scratch, because the old one was costing us new users every single week and nobody wanted to admit it out loud in planning meetings, so eventually three of us just quietly started prototyping a replacement on a Friday afternoon and it kind of spiraled from there into a full company initiative that shipped last week to genuinely great feedback from both new and existing users across every segment we track.